For immediate release: In all hardships, Christians are to look upward For the Display of His Splendor. This book reminds its readers that God created them for this generation, this time, and the struggles they currently face.

About the Book: Professor Amilliah Kenya wrote For the Display of His Splendor (Ambassador International; for the generation that struggles with anxiety, depression, and emotional exhaustion. Christians are struggling in this world. Fear, anxiety, depression, and emotional trauma grip even the strongest souls. It's easy to wonder where God is, and why He placed people in this world during this time. For the Display of His Splendor challenges Christians to allow God to work through them to showcase His glory. Professor Kenya writes, "God does not rend the heavens to descend on earth in human form as He did when He sent His Son, Jesus Christ, to redeem mankind. God uses men and women to meet the needs of each generation." For the Display of His Splendor lifts the Christian up from despair, and reminds every reader that, "Displaying God's splendor starts with a mere statement of purpose in the heart of the believer."

About the Author: Amilliah is a college professor whose passion is to point believers to a closer walk with God so they live significant and meaningful lives that impact this generation. Amilliah has authored Prayer and Spiritual Warfare, Back to God for Healing, The Power of a Woman, God's Presence the Missing Something, and Laying a Godly Legacy. She speaks in conferences, schools, colleges, churches, and different groups to men, women, and young people. Amilliah lives in South Carolina with her family. ### Suggested Interview Questions for the Author:

1. What prompted you to write this book?
2. In the book you state that God raises servants for difficult times. What does that mean and how does it relate to this century?
3. In your book, you state that God has the needs of this generation in mind and He is counting on His children to act. Expound on that.
4. What schemes does Satan use in modern days to stop Christians from pursuing their God-given assignments?
5. What will it take for Christians to display the splendor of God in this generation and meet the prevailing needs of our times?
6. What are some practical ways that those who are listening can engage in changing the societies in which they live?
7. You mention that Satan uses temptations to stop Christians from engaging in God's service. What kind of temptations should Christians watch out for in such modern times if they must effectively reach this generation?
8. What advice can you give Christians who are struggling with temptation and yet they are desiring to affect other people in positive ways?
9. Many Christians fear to step out and minister to people who are faced with diverse needs. What illustration or information can you point them to in this book to encourage them to step out and step up to the times?
10. What are your final remarks to those who are listening today?

Endorsement

The needs of a hurting generation are most evident in these current days. As Amilliah notes, God is neither deaf nor blind to humanities' plight, but rather in His sovereignty, He chooses to raise up individuals through whom He works, to provide for the needs of others. We are designed with God given potential that we might display His splendor to all people. This book helps the reader step into their God-given role with confidence, through practical application with each chapter.
